

When can babies eat eggs?

Categories:

Health & Nutrition, Food Safety

It is recommended to introduce whole egg into your child's diet in the first year of their life - around six months of age, but not before four months. These guidelines are the same for all babies, even those with a high risk of developing food allergies as studies have shown that introducing eggs within the first year helps children to develop a tolerance to eggs.

When can babies eat eggs?