

DETECTION OF vvIBDV STRAINS AND AUSTRALIAN VARIANTS IN POULTRY

Published: 1 November 2001

Authors: J. Ignjatovic, S. Sapats and G. Gould

Organisation: CSIRO Australian Animal Health Laboratory

Time: Nov 2001

Categories: Biosecurity & Flock Health

Tags: characterise, disease, endemic, infections bursal, mutations, poultry, strains, variant, virulent

This topic of this study is the very virulent infectious bursal disease virus (vvIBDV) and was carried out in order to develop a diagnostic test for potentially infected poultry. The study also aimed to confirm that all strains can be differentiated, to further characterise existing strains, and to determine the prevalence of different strains in Australia.

FULL REPORT

Detection of vvIBDV strains and Australian variants in poultry
PDF (37 KB)