

ELIMINATION OF "FISHY" TAIN IN EGGS FROM HENS FED DIETS CONTAINING CANOLA MEAL

Published: 1 June 2005

Authors: R. Perez-Maldonado and T. Treloar

Organisation: Poultry Research and Development Centre, Department of Primary Industries Queensland

Time: Jun 2005

Categories: Feeding & Nutrition

Tags: canola, canola meal, diet, diets, fishy taint, sinapine

When fed canola meal, the presence of a compound called sinapine in the meal often causes hens to lay eggs with a fishy taint. This study aims to identify the exact levels of sinapine that cause this, and to eliminate the phenomenon.

FULL REPORT

Elimination of "fishy" taint in eggs from hens fed diets containing canola meal
PDF (352 KB)