

IMPROVING MYCOPLASMA VACCINES - TARGETS FOR DEFINED ATTENUATION

Published: 1 April 2006

Authors: P.F. Markham, G.F. Browning, C-W. Tseng, A. Kanci

Organisation: The University of Melbourne

Time: Apr 2006

Categories: Biosecurity & Flock Health

Tags: outbreak, parent, bacterial, chickens, control, disease, gene, mycoplasma, protein, strains, vaccine

This project aims to improve the effectiveness of mycoplasma vaccines, and to use these findings to develop new vaccines capable of providing protection against variant strains that may not be controlled by the current generation of vaccines.

FULL REPORT

Improving mycoplasma vaccines - targets for defined attenuation
PDF (1.6 MB)